JUI-F Claims Maulana Fazl Arrested In Lahore, Police Deny Claim

STAFF REPORTER

LAHORE

The JUI-F claims Maulana Fazl arrested near Thokar Niaz Baig, but Lahore police have strongly denied the report, leading to conflicting statements on Friday.

JUI-F Deputy Secretary Information for Lahore, Hafiz Zain, said party chief Fazlur Rehman was detained near Thokar Niaz Baig. He alleged that Lahore CCPO Bilal Siddique Kamyana and DIG Operations Faisal Kamran were behind the action.

The DIG Operations rejected this claim. He said Maulana Fazl was not arrested and had already returned to his residence with his convoy.

The police official also said traffic on Multan Road and the motorway was moving smoothly.

The two sides gave different accounts amid rising tension over JUI-F protests. Party officials say restrictions have been placed on the party's planned activities in Punjab.

Earlier, the JUI-F alleged that Fazlur Rehman's movement was being limited in Lahore. The party then approached the Lahore High Court (LHC), saying he was kept confined. Police, however, denied arresting him or placing him under house arrest.

In the petition, the petitioner said police had surrounded Fazl's residence and stopped him from moving. According to the plea, this was the same as house arrest.

The petitioner added that the JUI-F chief was due to attend an all-parties conference (APC) organised by the Lahore High Court Bar Association. The court was asked to order his recovery and to hold an immediate hearing.

CHAKWAL/LAHORE

Punjab Chief Minister Maryam Nawaz Sharif on Friday inaugurated a number of development projects in Chakwal and Talagang, including a cardiac catheterisation laboratory at the District Headquarters Hospital, an academic block at the University of Chakwal and a renovated section of the city's historic Chappar Bazaar.

During her visit to Chakwal, the chief minister also distributed laptops and scholarships among students under the Honhaar Scholarship Programme. The renovation of the historic Sadar Bazar, formerly known as Chappar Bazar, was completed at a cost of more than Rs300 million.

She subsequently visited Dhrabi Resort, where she inaugurated the facility and unveiled the trophy for the first international paragliding championship being held at Diljabbah, Chakwal. She later proceeded to Talagang and inaugurated the green bus service.

Addressing a gathering at the University of Chakwal, Ms Nawaz said the district was known for the courage and sacrifices of its people, recalling the sacrifices made by local servicemen in defence of the country.

Expressing confidence in the potential of young people, she said she hoped students attending the ceremony would go on to achieve distinction in their respective fields and serve the country.

The chief minister said her government was committed to ensuring that no talented student was forced to abandon education because of financial constraints. Millions of students were benefiting from the Honhaar Scholarship Programme, she added.

"Now, the responsibility for your education does not rest solely with your parents; it is also mine," she told the students, assuring them that financial difficulties would not stand in the way of deserving candidates.

She said around 500 students from Khyber Pakhtunkhwa had also travelled to Punjab to receive scholarships, adding that students from the province would be included in the laptop scheme as well.

"Talent has no provincial boundaries and skills know no borders. Every child is my child and represents the future of Pakistan," she said.

Maryum Nawaz maintained that scholarships and laptops were not government favours but recognition of students' hard work and academic achievements. She said education, technology and opportunities for young people remained among her government's priorities.

While addressing the women she said that separate compartments will be installed in the buses for women and were equipped with CCTV cameras to provide a safer travelling environment for female passengers.

She said women and girls should be able to travel independently without fear, adding that insecurity remained one of the major obstacles to women's participation in public life.

"I want parents to send their daughters out with confidence, whether they travel by scooter or bus," she said.

Referring to governance and public-sector appointments, Maryum Nawaz stressed the importance of merit, saying that recommendations should not determine opportunities and that merit should prevail in Punjab.

PM calls for effective guidance for SMEs seeking financial support

- Calls for review of prudential regulations governing bank lending to SMEs; banks committed to achieving target of Rs2tr in loans to SMEs by June 2028

ISLAMABAD

Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif on Friday called for better guidance for small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) seeking financing from banks, enabling access to loans through simplified procedures.

Presiding over a meeting on facilitating access to credit for SMEs, the premier termed these enterprises the "backbone" of the country's economy.

"Facilitating them will boost economic activity, employment and business opportunities," the prime minister said.

The prime minister directed the provision of effective guidance and support to SMEs to improve their access to financial resources, prepare business documentation and benefit from opportunities in the export sector.

He called for further simplification of the procedures for SMEs to obtain loans.

"SMEs with export data available through the Pakistan Single Window, or those integrated into supply chains through Exim Insurance and digital invoicing, should be considered for loans against these records as collateral," the prime minister said.

He also directed that banks consider SMEs' cash flows as an alternative measure of collateral for lending.

PM Shehbaz called for a review of prudential regulations governing bank lending to SMEs. He further directed that banks be granted access to relevant data held by government institutions to expedite the lending process for these companies.

To facilitate SMEs, banks should not only provide loans but also assist them in issuing letters of credit (LCs) and providing bank guarantees, the PM said at the meeting. He added that banks achieving their prescribed SME lending targets would be encouraged.

The meeting was informed that banks were taking steps to strengthen their institutional capacity to accelerate lending to SMEs.

The banks expressed their commitment to achieving a target of providing Rs2 trillion in loans to SMEs by June 2028 and increasing the number of SME borrowers to 775,000.

The target includes the disbursement of Rs886bn in new loans and the provision of financial facilities to 449,000 new borrowers.

BEIJING

Federal Minister for Planning, Development and Special Initiatives Professor Ahsan Iqbal on Friday discussed a wide-ranging agenda of infrastructure, energy, industrial and trade cooperation with Vice Chairman of China's National Development and Reform Commission (NDRC) Zhou Haibing, seeking early progress on key projects under the China-Pakistan Economic Corridor (CPEC).

During the meeting, the minister also sought duty-free access for all Pakistani goods to the Chinese market through a non-reciprocal arrangement, separate from the existing bilateral free trade agreement and modelled on China's zero-tariff access for African countries.

Highlighting the trade imbalance, he pointed out that Pakistan's imports from China stood at $22.34 billion in 2025-26, compared to exports of $2.71 billion.

He proposed bilateral technical talks on product coverage, rules of origin and an implementation timetable.

The minister called for early completion of the financing agreement for the 102-kilometre Thor Nullah–Raikot section of the Karakoram Highway (KKH), the first priority under the wider Rs576 billion Thakot–Raikot realignment project.

The realignment is aimed at keeping the highway operational in areas where the existing route is affected by hydropower projects on the Indus River.

He also discussed Chinese participation in upgrading the ML-1 railway beyond the Karachi–Rohri section, for which Pakistan is exploring Asian Development Bank financing. He called for progress on four joint road feasibility studies, including the Babusar Tunnel project.

On Gwadar, Ahsan Iqbal sought Chinese support for restoring regular shipping services, including through engagement with COSCO, and proposed a joint study on strategic petroleum storage at the port.

The discussions also covered the Gwadar Free Zone, the second phase of the Eastbay Expressway and a proposed corridor linking Chagai's mining areas with Gwadar for mineral processing and exports.

Under the second phase of CPEC, the minister sought progress on the Kohala and Azad Pattan hydropower projects and proposed joint work to assess the feasibility of converting selected power plants from imported coal to locally available Thar coal.

He also sought Chinese approval for the Siah Diq copper project and proposed jointly developing two to three model special economic zones (SEZs).

Pakistan further proposed adding three private-sector projects to the CPEC industrial agenda, including an aluminium complex at Port Qasim, a fertiliser plant in Thar and a refinery and fuel storage complex at Dhabeji.

The meeting also covered implementation of two existing agreements on artificial intelligence, a proposed 1,500-kilometre fibre-optic link from Rawalpindi to Karachi and a jointly financed programme to provide 10,000 doctoral scholarships over 10 years.

Discussing agricultural cooperation, the minister explored Chinese partnerships in farm modernisation and proposed establishing food processing zones to reduce post-harvest losses and support exports.

Zhou Haibing described CPEC as a pillar of China-Pakistan economic cooperation and highlighted its tangible gains.

inDrive Outlines Comprehensive Safety Measures For Passengers Drivers

FINANCE REPORTER

ISLAMABAD

Global ride-hailing platform inDrive has outlined a comprehensive range of safety measures aimed at protecting passengers and drivers in Pakistan, highlighting the role of artificial intelligence, advanced technology, real-time monitoring and human oversight in ensuring safer journeys.

Passenger and driver safety remains a top priority as ride-hailing services continue to expand across Pakistan. The platform is implementing safety measures at every stage, from booking and journey completion to handling emergency situations, said a news release issued here on Friday.

The indrive said drivers must undergo mandatory verification procedures before being allowed to accept rides. These include verification of official documents, vehicle inspections and facial recognition technology to match the photograph on the driver's national identity document with their profile picture. Artificial intelligence is also used to identify fake and duplicate accounts.

Driver verification continues even after registration. If potential risks are identified, drivers may be asked to complete additional selfie verification and submit vehicle photographs to ensure that only verified drivers use approved vehicles.

Before confirming a booking, passengers can view the driver's name, profile photograph, user ratings and number of completed rides. Similarly, drivers can review a passenger's profile picture, rating, previous ride history and complete destination details before accepting a trip, enabling them to make informed decisions.

To protect users' personal information, inDrive keeps passengers' and drivers' phone numbers private and provides secure in-app calling and messaging facilities.

Islamabad Excise Suspends Physical Inspection Of Punjab Vehicles

● Punjab Buyers Must Travel To Islamabad For Vehicle Ownership Transfer Again Now

LAHORE

Residents of Punjab who have bought Islamabad-registered cars or other vehicles are reportedly facing a hurdle regarding the online transfer of ownership facility, as the Islamabad Excise Department has suspended the facility for physical inspection of such vehicles in Punjab.

The online inspection facility, which allowed vehicle owners to complete the physical verification process at designated excise offices in Punjab, has been discontinued.

The facility was introduced around two years ago to make the transfer of Islamabad-registered vehicles easier for buyers residing in Punjab.

Officials would then upload photographs and other vehicle details to an online portal.

Islamabad Excise authorities would subsequently verify the uploaded information and complete the biometric verification process before proceeding with the ownership transfer.

Reports said the Islamabad Excise Department has suspended the vehicle transfer facility through its online inspection portal without prior notice.

Following the decision, Punjab residents purchasing Islamabad-registered vehicles will now have to travel to the Islamabad Excise Office to complete the physical inspection and transfer formalities.

The Sanction That Never Comes: AFSPA And Sexual Violence

By Muhammad Waleed Akhtar

"…if an offence is committed even by Army personnel, there is no concept of absolute immunity from trial by the criminal court constituted under the Cr.P.C."

Supreme Court of India, Extra Judicial Execution Victim Families Association v. Union of India (2016)

On the night of 23 February 1991, Indian forcces entered the villages of Kunan and Poshpora in Kupwara district of Indian-Occupied Jammu and Kashmir. According to survivors, as recorded by the UN human rights office (OHCHR) in 2018, they gang-raped around 23 women, and attempts to seek justice were "denied and blocked over the years." A magistrate ordered further investigation in 2013. The High Court stayed that order on the Army's petition in 2015. No one has been tried.

This article does not claim that Section 7 of the Armed Forces (Jammu and Kashmir) Special Powers Act, 1990 (AFSPA) blocked a trial at Kunan Poshpora. The public record does not show that sanction was ever sought there. The claim is wider. Impunity for sexual violence in Indian-Occupied Kashmir follows from a legal design as much as from failed investigations: Section 7 bars prosecution for anything done or purported to be done under the Act without the previous sanction of the Central Government.

Indian authorities say the provision shields personnel acting in good faith from malicious prosecution, and that soldiers can be court-martialed. The Army and the Government deny the Kunan Poshpora allegations, a 1991 Press Council of India committee rejected them, and India's foreign ministry dismissed OHCHR's report as "fallacious, tendentious and motivated." The record allows each of these positions to be tested.

On 1 January 2018 the Minister of State for Defence told the Rajya Sabha that the Jammu and Kashmir Government had sent fifty requests between 2001 and 2016 for sanction to prosecute armed forces personnel. Forty-seven were denied, three were pending and none was granted. The stated reason was "lack of sufficient evidence to establish a prima facie case," which is a judgment about evidence that a court would ordinarily make. Four requests concerned sexual offences, three of them rape. All four were denied. The table names no cases and cannot be matched to Kunan Poshpora, but it shows how requests that reach Delhi end.

Courts have narrowed the shield without removing it. In General Officer Commanding v. CBI (2012), the Supreme Court held that "institution" under Section 7 means a court taking cognizance, not an agency filing a charge sheet. A completed investigation can therefore still stall at the threshold. In 2016, ruling on Manipur, the Court rejected absolute immunity but left the sanction requirement standing.

Outside scrutiny is limited too. In February 2020 the Defence Ministry told the Central Information Commission that sanction cases are processed in a "single file system originating from Army Headquarters," where the files are held. In June 2020 the Commission refused access to the 47 case files, holding that the State's larger public interest "prevails over that of the alleged victims," though it ordered release of the Ministry's refusal communications. The Central Government decides, but the file begins and stays with the institution whose personnel stand accused.

Article 4(c) of the 1993 Declaration on the Elimination of Violence against Women, which 25 November commemorates, requires states to investigate and punish violence against women "whether those acts are perpetrated by the State or by private persons." In 2014 the CEDAW Committee flagged AFSPA's prior-authorisation rule and a "reportedly high risk of reprisals" against women who complain about security forces in conflict-affected regions, including Kashmir, and urged India to remove the requirement. In 2024 the Human Rights Committee noted that India has declared no public emergency under Article 4 of the ICCPR. It described "a climate of widespread impunity" and told India to abolish mandatory prior authorisation.

Britain's own record is poor: in 2021 the Victims' Commissioner found that military rape convictions were four to six times lower than civilian ones. Even so, commanding officers cannot dispose of sexual offences summarily, and the Ministry of Defence says its prosecutor acts independently of the chain of command. Britain's problem is conviction. India's starts earlier, at the gate.

Parliament has already drawn the line elsewhere. In 2013 it provided that Section 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure requires no sanction for public servants accused of rape and other listed sexual offences, yet left AFSPA untouched. Three steps would close the gap: remove sanction for sexual offences by security personnel, as the Justice Verma Committee urged in 2013 and CEDAW in 2014; publish reasons for every refusal; and let a civilian court, not the executive, test whether an act has any link to official duty.

A safeguard that, by the Government's own 2018 account, granted none of fifty requests cannot show that it separates false accusations from true ones. Only a trial can do that, and

The River Of Lost Reunions: The Tragedy Of Irfan Hassan Shah

The Neelum River does not just carry water; it carries the weight of a million shattered dreams and the ghosts of divided families. Recently, its cold, churning currents swallowed another father, Irfan Hassan Shah. But to call this a "drowning" is to ignore the systemic slaughter of the human spirit. Irfan did not simply fall into a river; he was pushed into the abyss by a political line that has sliced through the hearts of Kashmiris for decades.

Irfan's story is a microcosm of the Kashmiri tragedy—a cycle of hope, betrayal, and forced separation. In the mid-90s, he crossed into Azad Kashmir with the dream of freedom. He built a life in Muzaffarabad, married, and raised three children. But the cruelty of the "divide" is that it never lets you truly settle. In 2012, driven by the filial piety of an aging son, Irfan returned to his ancestral village in Rafiabad to serve his parents in Indian occupied Kashmir.

That act of love was rewarded with two years of detention and torture by Indian agencies. Yet, he persisted. He worked tirelessly to ensure his children had the education he ever dreamed of—one to be a lawyer, the other a doctor and the other one a computer engineer . He wanted to build a bridge of knowledge and success for his children, even while the physical bridge to his family remained guarded by guns.

Then came the horror of May 2025. Under the guise of the Pahalgam incident, the Indian government unleashed a campaign of mass detentions and forced deportations. In a heartless stroke of administrative cruelty, families were ordered to return to Azad Kashmir. Wives were torn from husbands; children were ripped from their fathers' arms. Irfan's family was thrown back into the uncertainty of Muzaffarabad, leaving Irfan behind in a land where his very existence was viewed with suspicion.

Imagine the psychological torture of a man who cannot even call his children without risking a prison cell. Imagine the agony of a father who sees his children growing up through a telescope, knowing that the only thing separating him from them is a "Ceasefire Line" that acts as a wall of death.

The anxiety of the divided family is a slow-acting poison. It is the depression of knowing that your children are in a different world, and the only way to reach them is to gamble with your life. When the state denies a passport—turning a basic human right into a weapon of control—it leaves a desperate man with only one choice: the river.

Irfan chose the Keren sector. He didn't see a border; he saw a path to his children. He didn't see a ceasefire line; he saw a reunion. But the river, indifferent to human suffering, became his grave. His body was fished out by the disaster management team at Atmaqam—a reunion not of flesh and blood, but of a corpse and a grieving family.

Who is responsible for this death?

The blood is on the hands of those who maintain this artificial divide. It is on the Indian government that uses deportation as a weapon of war. It is on the "collaborators" who prioritize political optics over human lives. And it is on the United Nations, which continues to recite the script of "self-determination" and "human rights" while the world ignores the screams of Kashmiri families.

The UN Charter promises the right to family life, yet in Kashmir, the family is the first casualty of the conflict. When a family is torn apart in Europe, the world mourns. When a Kashmiri father drowns trying to hug his children, the world calls it a "security incident."

Irfan Hassan Shah is gone, but his death leaves us with a haunting question: How many more fathers must the Neelum River swallow before the world realizes that a line drawn on a map should not be a line drawn through a human heart?

Until the "Line of Control" becomes a line of peace, the waters of the Neelum will continue to run red with the blood of those who only wanted to go united with their families and loved ones.

Pakistani Confucius Institute Teacher: The Pakistani Student Who Practiced Chinese Calligraphy Has Now ReachedSpace

Pakistani astronaut Muhammad Zishan Ali's journey from Chinese calligraphy classes in Islamabad to the Tiangong space station shows how language and cooperation are changing China-Pakistan ties

On November 25, the Shenzhou-24 manned spacecraft was successfully launched, carrying Pakistani astronaut Muhammad Zishan Ali to the Chinese space station "Tiangong," becoming the first foreign astronaut to enter the Chinese space station. In an interview, he specifically mentioned that the most challenging part of all his training was learning Chinese. In fact, he and another astronaut candidate selected for the Chinese space station mission both studied Chinese at the Confucius Institute at Beijing Language and Culture University in Islamabad. How did they "learn" this "essential course for spaceflight"? The Sichuan International Communication Center invited Rashida Mustafa, a lecturer in the Department of Sinology at the National University of Modern Languages in Pakistan, to recount the two astronauts' experiences learning Chinese and share her observations on the growing "Chinese fever" among young people in Pakistan.

As a Chinese language teacher and coordinator at the Confucius Institute at the Islamabad campus of the National University of Modern Languages (NUML) in Pakistan, I had the opportunity to speak with candidates Muhammad Zishan Ali and Hulam Daoud. I recall that both of them had a strong interest in Chinese culture, including the Chinese language, and frequently participated in Chinese calligraphy activities organized by the Confucius Institute.

During the activity, the two students didn't simply finish writing and leave; instead, they earnestly asked me, "Teacher, why is this stroke like this? What does this character mean?" Even if they made a mistake, they would proactively ask for another sheet of paper to practice again. Their serious and engaged attitude left a deep impression on me. This showed me that beyond language learning, they were also willing to actively explore the cultural connotations behind the Chinese language. This thirst for knowledge is truly invaluable.

I was thrilled to learn that Pakistani astronaut Muhammad Zishan Ali had become the first foreign astronaut to visit the Chinese space station, and I am genuinely proud of Pakistani youth. This is not only a significant moment in the development of Pakistan's space program, but it also means that young Pakistanis have the opportunity to participate in cutting-edge international scientific and technological cooperation through their own efforts and professional skills.

In my view, the significance of this event goes beyond simply "entering space." It allows more young people to see how vast the opportunities science, education, and international exchange can open up for personal growth and development. For the people of Pakistan, seeing their youth have the opportunity to step onto such an international stage gives them greater confidence in the future of the next generation.

Having participated in China-Pakistan educational cooperation for many years at the Confucius Institute at the National University of Modern Languages (NUML) in Pakistan, I have witnessed firsthand the evolution of the cooperation model between the two countries. The past model was more like "you watch, I do." A decade or so ago, when we participated in international exchange activities, developing countries often could only play the role of bystanders: others conducted experiments, and we watched; others explained, and we took notes.

However, the cooperation approach embodied in the Shenzhou-24 mission was completely different; it was "we do it together." China did not invite Pakistan to "come and see our space station," but rather invited Pakistani aerospace professionals to "conduct experiments with us on the space station." The Pakistani astronauts participating in the mission did not enter the space station as tourists, but as payload specialists undertaking Sino-Pakistani cooperative space science experiments, becoming equal partners.

I've personally experienced this shift in cooperation models in my work at the Confucius Institute. In the past, our cooperation was largely about "Chinese teachers teaching and Pakistani students learning." Now, the forms of cooperation are increasingly diverse. We jointly organize calligraphy activities, youth exchange camps, and educational forums. Chinese teachers teach Pakistani students calligraphy, and Pakistani students introduce their own dances and culture to Chinese teachers. Both sides learn from and share with each other through these exchanges, moving beyond a one-way transmission of knowledge.

From the classrooms of the Confucius Institute to the Tiangong space station, the same principle is evident: cooperation is shifting from one-way learning to two-way exchange, from one-way instruction to joint participation. This space cooperation also shows us that collaboration in the field of science and technology requires not only professional knowledge but also communication and trust between people. Language plays a crucial role, and for the two astronauts who had the opportunity to participate in the China-Pakistan cooperation project, language and cultural knowledge can also help them better understand their partners and enhance mutual communication.

In my work at the Confucius Institute, I've observed many young people who initially encountered Chinese out of curiosity, but gradually deepened their understanding of China through language learning and cultural activities. This process, starting with language learning and progressing to cultural understanding and friendly exchange, is precisely the significance of people-to-people exchanges.

To the young Pakistanis learning Chinese, I say: Don't be afraid to start from scratch. Keep learning, actively engage in conversation, and learn more about Chinese culture. You will discover that this language can bring many unexpected opportunities. I hope more Pakistani youth can use Chinese as a bridge to enhance exchanges between China and Pakistan, broaden their horizons, and create more possibilities for realizing their personal ideals.A lecturer in the Department of Chinese Studies at the National University of Modern Languages, Pakistan, with twenty years of experience in teaching Chinese and conducting Sinological research. Proficient in both Chinese and Urdu, she has long been deeply involved in Chinese language teaching, Chinese grammar, and the translation of Chinese culture, and actively participates in Sino-Pakistani cultural exchange activities.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT

PENTAGON

Hackers breach US Air Force systems, according to a Reuters report that has raised serious worries about military data safety. The attack hit Cloud One, the Air Force's main cloud computing platform.

Three people familiar with the matter shared the news with Reuters. They said the intrusion was found within the past month during an upgrade of the system.

The discovery has caused disruption across the platform. Reuters could not confirm who the hackers are. It also could not say how far the breach went or whether any data was stolen.

The Air Force gave a short reply. It said it does not comment on the security or operational status of specific networks. It added that it takes careful steps to protect its systems and missions.

What Is Cloud One?

Cloud One began in 2017. It was built as a one-stop shop for the Air Force's technology needs. It uses the resources of four companies: Microsoft, Amazon, Oracle and Alphabet.

The platform runs many applications. These include systems for personnel data, pay, logistics and maintenance. Two key tools also depend on it.

One is the Cloud-Based Command and Control system, which gathers air defence radar data from across North America. The other is the Theatre Integrated Combat Munitions System, which tracks bombs and missiles at over 200 Air Force sites worldwide.

SAIC was the main contractor until 2025, when Leidos took over. SAIC did not reply to a request for comment. Leidos sent questions to the Air Force.

Disruption and Possible Risks

Sources said plans to move back-office applications to Cloud One have been paused. Updates to apps already on the platform were also blocked.

This means staff cannot apply fixes, just as new software weaknesses have been reported across the tech industry. Another source said some users lost their administrator rights.

One source said the hackers used a software flaw to reach the control plane. The source compared it to a universal remote. In theory, intruders could use it to check the status of military aircraft or track spare parts. It is not clear if they did so.

Investigators have called in Cyber Command, the US military's cyber force, to assess the damage. One source said, "A breach here is a big deal." All five sources asked not to be named.

A String of Recent Hacks

The news comes during growing fear of AI-powered attacks. Cloud networks are especially open to them, because AI tools can quickly find weak spots across large systems.

The US government is already dealing with at least six other recent cyber incidents. These include two at the FBI, a past hack of Pentagon data, a leak of Homeland Security staff information, a breach at two spy agencies and a hack at the Treasury Department.

Cloud One has long been a target. In a 2023 commentary, its leaders said they had a perfect record in stopping a huge number of attempts. They also stressed that security leaves no room for error.

CASS Examines the Role of Institutions in Pakistan's Economic Challenges

● Experts Urge Institutional Reforms, Accountability To Boost Pakistan Economic Growth And Stability

ISLAMABAD

The Centre for Aerospace & Security Studies (CASS) organised a Catalyst Conversation on 24 November 2026 titled 'Institutions, Governance, and Economic Growth in Pakistan'. The session examined how political and economic institutions shape national prosperity, economic performance and political stability. As an independent think tank, CASS regularly convenes such forums to advance informed policy discourse on issues of critical national and international significance.

Dr Aqdas Afzal, Director CASS, moderated the session and framed the discussion around the relationship between institutional structures, economic stagnation and political instability. He highlighted the importance of examining the role of institutions in shaping Pakistan's economic trajectory, particularly in the context of its recurring boom-and-bust cycles, policy discontinuity and challenges to institutional autonomy.

The keynote speaker, Dr Tariq Banuri, former Chairman of the Higher Education Commission (HEC), observed that economic literature has long explored why some countries prosper while others remain poor. Before the 1980s, economic growth was largely attributed to functional markets. However, subsequent scholarship increasingly highlighted the role of institutions in economic development. In Pakistan, Dr Banuri noted, the colonial legacy of extractive institutions has hindered meaningful reform. He emphasised that prosperity required transforming institutional culture, as introducing policies alone was insufficient. He stressed that all state institutions must uphold the 1973 Constitution as sacred, without amendments, and underscored accountability as a prerequisite for institutional effectiveness. He concluded that good governance was fundamental to economic development.

In his concluding remarks, President CASS, Air Marshal Javaid Ahmed (Retd), highlighted the importance of strengthening institutions as a prerequisite for sustainable economic development and stability. He emphasised the need for realistic, sequenced institutional reforms and effective leadership to restore public trust, strengthen governance and create an enabling environment for inclusive and sustained growth.

Journalist Arrested After Exposing Iran's Secret Death Sentences For Two Prisoners

TEHRAN

A journalist arrested in Iran is now at the center of a growing press freedom crisis. Mehdi Mahmoudian was detained in Tehran on 25 November, only hours after he made public a court document about two political prisoners facing execution.

The two prisoners are linked to Iran's "Woman, Life, Freedom" movement. They were sentenced to death on 24 November. Without Mahmoudian's report, the public would not have known about it.

His story caused strong public anger. According to the lawyer of one prisoner, the authorities later suspended the sentence. The government also said that the death sentences had not been cancelled.

Officials then blamed a "media-legal" pact for blocking the work of the courts. They also warned that journalists would be watched closely.

Police went to Mahmoudian's home on 25 November. They arrested him and took away his equipment.

Reporters Without Borders (RSF) says he was badly treated in detention. The group confirmed that he was beaten so hard that he lost consciousness. He was taken to hospital first. After that, he was moved to Greater Tehran Prison, also known as Tehran Bozorg.

New Zealand's Ruling Coalition Misses Parliamentary Majority By Just One Seat

NEW ZEALAND

New Zealand's ruling coalition has fallen one seat short of a majority in parliament. The result follows a campaign shaped by a weak economy and unhappy voters.

Official results released on Friday show the government now needs the support of the centrist Opportunity Party to stay in power. If the two sides cannot reach a deal, the country may have to vote again.

Prime Minister Christopher Luxon's National Party won 40 of the 130 seats. Its partners, ACT and New Zealand First, won 13 and 12 seats. Together they hold 65 seats, one fewer than needed.

The Labour Party took 36 seats and the Greens won 17. Te Pāi Māori, which speaks for Māori interests, secured five. Even with the seven seats of Opportunity, the left-leaning bloc cannot form a government.

Luxon said the talks may be hard and will take time. He added that voters would not thank leaders for a rushed deal that falls apart, or for sending them back to the polls.

Labour leader Chris Hipkins said his party ran a strong campaign, but it has no power to negotiate.

OPEC+ Facing Tricky Talks On 2027 Output And Capacity Targets

WEB DESK

VIENNA

OPEC+ facing tricky talks is the clear picture as ministers of the oil alliance prepare to meet online on Sunday. They will try to agree on production quotas for next year. The US war against Iran has shaken oil markets worldwide and left little clarity about the road ahead.

Ministers will also fix a maximum capacity level for each member country. The aim is to make the oil industries of members more open and transparent. These levels will become the base for future output quotas.

The new numbers came after two years of study by an outside firm, the US-based DeGolyer and MacNaughton. Even so, some of the alliance's 21 members are already unhappy with them.

OPEC Secretary General Haitham Al Ghais defended the process in mid-November. He said that, for the first time, maximum sustainable capacity has been judged through an independent and fair method.

Iraq has reportedly rejected its figure as too low. It says it can sustainably produce 5.2 million barrels per day, not the 5 million set in the study, according to a Bloomberg News report this week.

Iraq is one of the Gulf states hit hardest by the near shutdown of the Strait of Hormuz by Tehran since the war began in February.

SHOWBIZ REPORTER

KARACHI

Pakistani actresses Durefishan Saleem and Urwa Hocane have voiced their pride in the country's entertainment industry, celebrating the growing international recognition of Pakistani artists and storytellers amid the controversy surrounding Pakistani content in India.

Taking to their Instagram stories, both actresses shared messages highlighting Pakistan's artistic achievements and the global reach of its entertainment industry, with particular attention to the country's first Netflix collaboration, Jo Bachay Hain Sang Samait Lo.

Durefishan reshared a post featuring a list of Pakistani artists, actors and filmmakers who have earned recognition on international platforms. The post opened with the statement, "Pakistan. The world is watching," before highlighting the achievements of several Pakistani visual artists whose work has been showcased at international exhibitions.

It also celebrated the international recognition received by the film Lali, the global reach of Dar-e-Nijaat and the performances of Pakistani actors in the currently airing drama Mitti De Baway.

The post highlighted Jo Bachay Hain Sang Samait Lo, featuring Mahira Khan, Fawad Khan, Sanam Saeed, Hania Aamir, Khushal Khan, Iqra Aziz, Ahmad Ali Akbar and Bilal Abbas Khan, describing it as Pakistan's first Netflix collaboration.

Durefshan's story further included an achievement beyond the entertainment industry, mentioning Pakistani astronaut Zeeshan Ali and his journey into Earth's orbit, presenting it as another milestone adding to the country's growing list of accomplishments.

Meanwhile, Urwa Hocane also shared a strongly worded message celebrating the Netflix milestone, describing it as a victory for Pakistani storytelling and talent despite what she termed hatred and political insecurity in the neighbouring country.

Calling the achievement a significant moment for the industry, Urwa wrote, "I mean it's a milestone only because some excellent storytelling and talent just won in the face of such hatred and political insecurity/instability of the sore losers we live next to!"

She further maintained that the collaboration was not something Pakistani artists needed to prove their worth, but an opportunity for audiences on the streaming platform to experience the quality of storytelling that had already earned international appreciation.

"Forever proud to be a Pakistani and to be a part of this powerhouse Pakistani Film & TV industry!" she added.

The actresses' messages come amid growing controversy over Pakistani entertainment in India, following cancellations and banning of Pakistani dramas and content .

The reactions also reflect a broader sentiment among Pakistani entertainment figures that the country's artists and creative industry should be recognised for their work and international achievements rather than being drawn into political disputes.

- The actor shared how Hadi's inner conflict stayed with him long after filming

KARACHI

Actor Talha Chahour praised writer Umera Ahmed for crafting an emotionally compelling scene in the drama serial Rutba, revealing that his character Hadi's internal conflict continued to resonate with him long after filming.

Taking to his Instagram Story, the actor shared his appreciation for the sequence, describing it as one of the most powerful moments in Pakistani television dramas.

"One of the boldest and most thought-provoking scenes in the history of Pakistani dramas!" he wrote, adding a broken-heart emoji.

Chahour went on to applaud Ahmed's writing, particularly her portrayal of Hadi as a deeply flawed individual struggling with his conscience.

"How beautifully Umera Ahmed has portrayed Hadi's character in Rutba — a reflection of human weakness, greed, guilt, and the consequences of our own choices," he wrote.

The actor also shared a personal reflection on the scene, writing: "This scene and Hadi's conflict stayed with me long after we shot it."

The sequence centres on Hadi confronting his own shortcomings at a deeply personal moment. Despite being regarded as someone capable of guiding others, he finds himself struggling to seek guidance for his own life.

His admission, "I need guidance myself," becomes particularly poignant as he grapples with the weight of his decisions and the distance between the person he appears to be and the person he has become.

The scene's emotional impact lies in its exploration of guilt and accountability rather than relying on dramatic confrontations. It presents a man forced to confront the consequences of his choices, suggesting that professional achievements and social standing cannot necessarily bring inner peace.

Chahour's appreciation also highlights the strength of Ahmed's characterisation. Rather than presenting Hadi as an uncomplicated protagonist, the writer allows him to make mistakes, experience remorse and confront the uncomfortable realities of his own behaviour.

The actor concluded his appreciation by giving credit to the writer, writing: "All credit to Umerajee for writing a scene that lets guilt speak louder than words."

JAPAN

American Ilia Malinin said skating without expectations had helped him break the short programme world record on Friday with a stunning score of 114.81.

The three-time world champion gave a majestic performance at the NHK Trophy in Japan to beat the previous highest score of 113.97, set by American Nathan Chen at the 2022 Beijing Olympics.

Malinin was the hot favourite for gold in his first Olympic appearance at this year's Milan-Cortina Games, but flamed out in a disastrous performance and finished eighth.

He said previous experience had taught him not to try too hard, and he reaped the benefits in Tokyo.

"Coming to this competition, I just wanted to enjoy the moment of figure skating, enjoy the environment," said the 21-year-old, who is nicknamed "Quad God" for his audacious quadruple jumps.

"Because the last few seasons I've always been trying to do my best, trying to appreciate how high I could score.

"Here, I just came to enjoy figure skating, and I think it helped me to be really calm and in the right mindset to skate my best."

Football icons Lionel Messi and Cristiano Ronaldo could feature together on the same team for the first time in history during former Argentine forward Carlos Tevez's upcoming farewell match.

According to international media reports, Messi has confirmed his participation in the exhibition game—titled "Apache's Last Dance"—while Ronaldo has also received an invitation to play. The match is scheduled to take place on December 20 at Buenos Aires' iconic La Bombonera stadium.

Several other football legends are also slated to appear in the match, including Gianluigi Buffon, Juan Román Riquelme, Rio Ferdinand, Sergio Agüero, Martín Palermo, and Gabriel Batistuta. Roberto Mancini and Carlos Bianchi will serve as managers for the two competing sides.

Bangladesh A set 233-run target for Pakistan Shaheens in Asia Cup Rising Stars Semis

SPORTS DESK

OMAN

Bangladesh A set Pakistan Shaheens a target of 233 runs in the Asia Cup Rising Stars semis. They scored 232-8 in their 50 overs after choosing to bat first.

Shahadat Hossain was the hero of the innings. He stayed not out on 103 runs and kept his side alive when wickets fell around him.

The start was poor for Bangladesh A. Ali Raza took both openers inside five overs. Mahmudul Hasan Joy made nine runs, while captain Saif Hassan scored only two. The score was 15 for two.

Hossain then took charge. He built a strong 95-run stand for the third wicket with Mahidul Islam Ankon. Ankon scored 42 runs from 78 balls before Muqeem removed him on the first ball of the 28th over.

Muqeem struck again in his next over. He dismissed Afif Hossain for five and Shabbir Rahman for a duck. Bangladesh A dropped to 118-5 and were in trouble.

SM Meherob gave Hossain good support at the other end. The two added a useful 52 runs for the sixth wicket and steadied the innings.

Hasan Nawaz broke that stand in the 41st over. He removed Rubel, who made 28 runs from 36 balls with two fours. Nawaz then got another batter caught behind in the same over.

The score fell to 170-7.

Cricket Australia Widens Sandpapergate Forum To Include 2017-18 Ashes Series

● The independent forum will also look at ball-management practices, but it will not reopen the probe or hand out new sanctions

SPORTS DESK

PORT ELIZABETH

Cricket Australia has widened its independent Sandpapergate forum to cover the Ashes series against England that came before the South Africa tour. The governing body also promised to publish the findings and its own response.

The board has ruled out reopening its original investigation into the 2018 ball-tampering scandal. The issue flared up again this month. Instead, it has offered a voluntary forum where players, coaches and staff from that tour can share their own versions of events.

In a surprise move, the terms of reference now include ball-management practices during the 2017-18 season. That covers the home Ashes series, which Australia won 4-0. The hosts kept getting reverse swing in that series, and England's bowlers could not work out how.

Former England captain Alastair Cook was part of that side. This month he was asked whether the team suspected Australia of tampering. He said they did, a little, especially in Perth when the outfield was wet. The matter went no further at the time.

Senior counsel Fiona McLeod will lead the forum. It will stay open for six weeks. She will look at the Ashes, all four Tests in South Africa, the events of March 24, 2018, when Cameron Bancroft was caught with sandpaper, and how Cricket Australia handled its own probe.

POA announces revised schedule of 14th South Asian Games

SPORTS DESK

RIYADH

Pakistan will host the 14th South Asian Games from September 18 to 27, 2027, the Pakistan Olympic Association (POA) announced on Friday after securing agreement from all participating national Olympic committees.

The revised dates follow the postponement of the regional multi-sport event, which was originally scheduled to take place from April 3 to 11 across Islamabad, Lahore and Peshawar.

The POA said the decision was taken following consultations and formal concurrence from all South Asian national Olympic committees, with the rescheduling of the 6th Asian Indoor and Martial Arts Games in Riyadh a key consideration.

"The revised dates take into account the rescheduling of the 6th Asian Indoor and Martial Arts Games, with the welfare and well-being of athletes remaining paramount and ensuring opportunities for their participation in both events," POA secretary general Muhammad Khalid Mahmood said in a statement.

The association said the consensus among regional Olympic bodies reflected solidarity and cooperation within the South Asian Olympic movement.

The participating committees also extended their best wishes to the organising committee and Pakistan's Olympic and sporting community for successfully staging the competition.

Pakistan had earlier been expected to announce a September window after the original dates clashed with the Asian Indoor and Martial Arts Games, scheduled to be held in Riyadh from March 28 to April 8, 2027.

The indoor and martial arts competition had itself been postponed from December 2026 because of security concerns.

Former world boxing champion Jorge Linares has been released by US immigration authorities pending proceedings for his removal from the country, the government said.

The 41-year-old Venezuelan, a three-division world champion, was detained on November 15 in El Paso, Texas, for overstaying his visa, Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) said in an email late Thursday.

It said Linares had entered the United States in October 2023 on a temporary permit.

"But in defiance of our nation's laws, he overstayed his welcome," the statement said.

Linares was released Wednesday by an immigration judge and is wearing a GPS tracking device pending the outcome of his removal proceedings, ICE said.

"Our friend and former WBA world champion Jorge Linares is back with his family," World Boxing Association president Gilberto Mendoza posted on X.

At the time of his arrest, Linares's lawyers said he was "authorized to be in the United States, and he has cooperated fully with immigration authorities."

ECP rules out role in allocation of tickets to women

STAFF REPORTER

ISLAMABAD

Election Commission of Pakistan (ECP) has clarified that political parties have the exclusive authority to allocate tickets to women candidates on general seats under existing electoral laws, and the commission cannot intervene in their internal decisions or direct them to award tickets for constituencies where women have better chances of winning.

In a clarification issued on Friday, the ECP spokesperson responded to a news report published in an English-language newspaper regarding directions allegedly issued by a parliamentary committee, asking the commission to ensure that political parties allocate the mandatory five per cent quota for women under Section 206 of the Elections Act to general constituencies where their victory is more likely.

The reported directions also called on the ECP to make arrangements for filling 563 vacant seats in various local governments.

The spokesperson said the commission had already informed the parliamentary committee that, under the existing electoral framework, the allocation of party tickets to women candidates rested solely with political parties.

The ECP was neither authorised to interfere in this process nor empowered to decide which constituencies should be allocated to women candidates, the spokesperson added.

He said the distribution of tickets among constituencies was an internal matter of political parties. If the committee wanted women to be fielded on general seats where their chances of winning were higher, an amendment to the existing law would be required, as the authority to legislate rested with Parliament.

Regarding the 563 vacant local government seats, the spokesperson said the committee had also been informed that the ECP had issued election schedules on several occasions to fill these vacancies.

Man rescued 54 hours after Karachi building collapse

STAFF REPORTER

KARACHI

A man has been rescued 54 hours after the collapse of an under-construction six-storey building in Karachi's Administration Employees Cooperative Housing Society (KAECHS), which left eight people dead, while 10 people remain missing and 12 injured.

It comes hours after rescue teams recovered the body of the eighth victim, identified as Allah Ditta, from beneath the rubble. The other seven dead persons were identified as Mohammad Naveed son of Saeed aged 22, Farhan son of Saeed aged 35, Mohammad Arsalan son of Ghulam Mohammad aged 17, Najeebullah son of unknown, Abid son of Mustafa aged 25 and Bilal son of Ramzan aged 24.

All the bodies were shifted to Jinnah Post Medical Center (JPMC) in Karachi by ambulance.

Rescue teams are continuing the search for people trapped beneath the rubble near Baloch Colony, with rescuers prioritising manual searches over heavy machinery amid concerns that the use of equipment could damage bodies and destabilise the remaining structure. Rescue 1122 said teams were exercising caution during the operation and had created pockets in the debris to access areas where people could be trapped.

Officials said manual searching was being prioritised because heavy machinery could damage bodies buried beneath the rubble and potentially cause further collapse of the building's structure.

According to the spokesperson, 13 injured people were discharged after receiving medical treatment, while one person remains in hospital.

Police registered a case over the building collapse, invoking charges related to murder, negligence and carelessness, among other offences.

Police said ten people have been nominated in the case, four of whom have been arrested.

Provincial emergency services had said in a statement on Wednesday they had "retrieved three bodies and 14 injured people from the rubble", after media saw huge piles of wreckage and twisted metal at the site of the collapse in Karachi's Baloch Colony area.
